Dear Readers,

It is with great pleasure that I present to you the latest issue of the Australasian Medical Journal (AMJ) for the year 2025. Since its establishment in 2008, AMJ has maintained a consistent publication schedule of twelve issues per year, committed to disseminating scholarly, systematic, and peer-reviewed research. Each issue features a diverse range of article types, including original research, review articles, case reports, case studies, letters to the editor, commentaries, and expert opinions.

AMJ was founded with a mission to support researchers—particularly from developing countries—in communicating the outcomes of their scientific investigations. We remain deeply committed to that goal. Over time, our journal has also attracted contributions from leading researchers in Australia, Saudi Arabia, China, the United States, Morocco, Nigeria, South Africa, Denmark, and many other countries, reflecting our growing global reputation and commitment to quality.

While the journal primarily focuses on advancing medical science and healthcare innovations within the Australasian region, its reach and readership extend worldwide. All published content is widely indexed in various abstracting and indexing databases, ensuring accessibility and global visibility.

Currently, AMJ is in the process of compiling the tenth issue of Volume 18. This year, we have proudly published high-quality, peer-reviewed articles on a wide spectrum of topics including:

- Oesophageal Carcinoma
- Cardiovascular Health
- 3D Printing Software Technology
- Shear Wave Elastography
- Diabetes
- Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV)
- Geriatric Medicine
- Nutrition Studies
- Haemodynamic Studies

These topics highlight the pressing medical challenges and dynamic research initiatives underway across the globe.

We are also proud of our dedicated editorial board, with strong representation from Australia, which ensures that publication timeliness due to professional services offered by the academic editorial and journal management boards.

AMJ remains at the forefront of regional and international research excellence. I extend my heartfelt thanks to all authors who have chosen AMJ as a platform to share their valuable work. My sincere appreciation also goes to our editorial team and peer reviewers, whose professionalism and commitment ensure the timely and high-quality publication of each issue.

We look forward to the continued success and growth of the journal. I warmly invite you to join us as a reviewer or to recommend qualified reviewers. We also encourage you to submit your manuscripts to AMJ and share our journal with your colleagues as a trusted venue for publishing impactful medical research.
